

In accordance with our mission to be an expert, partner and catalyst for action to address statelessness, the Institute on Statelessness and Inclusion has established the Statelessness Working Paper Series to facilitate the flow of knowledge and information between actors engaged with the issue across different contexts, countries and disciplines.

This online, open access resource offers an avenue for centralising and sharing the latest knowledge, developments, and research findings on statelessness from multiple fields (including, but not limited to law, sociology, history, economics and health).

We aim to publish two editions each year, with several papers each time, in June and December.

We warmly welcome contributions from around the world for our Statelessness Working Paper Series. The deadline for consideration in the next cycle is 15 September 2017.

Contributions are welcomed from both scholars and practitioners, at any stage of their career. Research papers may present the findings of studies relating to statelessness in any discipline and may offer a discussion of theoretical/conceptual issues or an analysis of on-the-ground realities. Policy papers may report and comment on developments in the area of statelessness-related law, policy or programming. Papers may focus on a specific country or population, or provide a comparative, regional or global perspective on the issue.

Please visit our dedicated webpage for:

Visit our dedicated webpage at:

www.institutesi.org/papers

- ✓ The latest edition of our Statelessness Working Paper Series
- ✓ All the details of how to contribute, including the procedure for submission and a full Style Guide for Authors

If you would like to discuss the fit of your paper in the Statelessness Working Paper Series or have other inquiries, please do not hesitate to write to us. Submissions and questions should be addressed to papers@institutesi.org.

Share your knowledge or research findings on statelessness:

Contribute to the Statelessness Working Paper Series!